

The Body Guy

1. Evan Miller has a form of dissociative disorder that makes it difficult for him to relate to others, which was brought on by childhood traumas. How easy is it for you to connect with people? Did your childhood impact the ease or difficulty you have?
2. Joseph became Evan's responsibility after his aunt died. Have you ever become responsible for another through no choice of your own? How did it work out?
3. Evan winds up in Settlers' Ridge because he stands up for what is right. Have you ever suffered repercussions because you spoke out against injustice?
4. Evan's neighbors are helping him to learn to relate to people. What impact do your neighbors have on you?
5. Tildy comes across as a frail, older lady, yet she delights in ghoulish humor and was a nurse in Vietnam, a job that required great strength. Have you ever discovered that someone wasn't what they seemed? Was this a good thing or a bad thing?
6. Both Tildy and Gus are veterans. Are you a veteran? Do you know any veterans? Do you or they ever talk about their experience?
7. Crooked is going through a mid-life crises. Do you think he was right to chuck his job and try to "find himself"?
8. Betty Robinson is obsessed with her social position and family name. Do you think these things are important? In what way?

9. By most accounts, Andrew Robinson was a spoiled, self-centered brat, yet Sheila found him sympathetic and funny. Do you think that even the most unlikable people have a good side? Have you ever experienced this?

10. Frederick talks about how people used to be more accepting of their neighbor's faults. Do you think this is true?
